GENERAL MEDICAL COUNCIL

Introduction

Formed as a result of the 1858 Medical Act, the General Medical Council has 104 members elected from the medical profession and the public. The GMC has strong legal powers with which to protect the patient, and it is responsible to the Privy Council for establishing a register of qualified practitioners, defining their qualifications and appointing examiners.

1 Minutes, 1856-1870

These bound volumes contain the printed minutes of the General Medical Council and of its Committees for each year. While the titles of the Committees vary from one period to another, they concern the professional training and registration of medical practitioners; professional discipline and conduct; finance, and the general business of the Council. There are also minutes of Committees concerned with dental practice.

There are indices at the end of each volume.
