LHB 3 EDINBURGH ROYAL MATERNITY HOSPITAL AND SIMPSON MEMORIAL MATERNITY PAVILION

Introduction

At its opening on 1st May 1879 the Edinburgh Royal Maternity and Simpson Memorial Hospital became the first building in Edinburgh to be planned as a maternity hospital. As early as 1756 provision had been made for four maternity beds in the Royal Infirmary, and in 1793 the General Lying-in Hospital¹ had been opened at Park House. However, it was not until 1879 that money collected to commemorate the contribution of Sir James Young Simpson to obstetrics, ended the numerous moves to makeshift hospitals which had been made over the preceding forty years, and enabled the city to open a purpose built maternity hospital, where the poor could have their children under medical supervision.

Initially the hospital consisted of two lying-in wards, a labour ward, a dispensary, kitchens and administrative quarters, as well as quarters for the matron, two house surgeons and seven or eight nurses. In 1895 Lady Tweedale opened the Married Women's Pavilion. This was the west wing originally proposed by the architects, MacGibbon and Ross, but postponed in 1879 because of insufficient funds.

Four visiting physicians with their assistants undertook, in rotation, a three month term of duty. Besides hospital deliveries, medical students or pupil midwives, supervised by hospital staff, attended home deliveries. These are recorded in the Out-Door Case Books. The 1886 amendment to the Medical Act made midwifery a compulsory course in the medical curriculum and from 1890 women students were admitted to the hospital for clinical instruction. The risk of infection was always present and in 1899 the hospital closed because of puerperal septicaemia. Later, cases were transferred as quickly as possible to the City Hospital to prevent cross-infection and in 1924 Dr Nasmyth donated a new labour ward allowing the separation of infected cases.

By 1910 the hospital was dealing annually with 616 indoor and 1327 district cases, and the hospital authorities were faced increasingly with problems such as the lack of operating facilities, unsatisfactory accommodation, inadequate sanitation and gross overcrowding. After World War 1 three main door basement flats in Lauriston Park and two flats in Graham Street were acquired to try to meet the increasing demands on the hospital.

Through the first quarter of the twentieth century advances were made in obstetrics, pathology and paediatrics. In 1901 a pre-maternity bed was instituted at the hospital. William Ballantyne took a particular interest in the physiology and pathology of pregnancy and James Haig Ferguson furthered the cause of preventative medicine by stressing the benefits of routine ante-natal supervision. As a result of his efforts the first out-patient ante-natal clinic in Britain was opened in 1915 and in 1926 a post-natal clinic was opened. The Central Midwives Board for England and Wales (established 1902) recognised the Simpson as a training centre for midwives wishing to practice south of the Border. In 1915 the Central Midwives Board for Scotland was established and the following year the hospital was recognised by them.

LHB 3 EDINBURGH ROYAL MATERNITY HOSPITAL AND SIMPSON MEMORIAL MATERNITY PAVILION

Two years after the Notification of Births (Extension) Act of 1915, the Edinburgh Local Authority launched a maternity and child welfare scheme in conjunction with the hospital. Seven ante-natal out patient clinics were opened in Edinburgh with the main consultative centre at the Maternity Hospital, for which the Corporation paid the hospital £200. In 1919 the Local Authority, acting on the recommendation of a Royal Commission Report of 1916, arranged with the hospital the establishment of an ante-natal out-patient and in-patient venereal diseases department.

In 1925 the first assistant paediatric physician was appointed. With maternal deaths in Scotland reaching a peak of 651 in 1931, a concerted effort was made to combat eclampsia and generally to reduce perinatal morbidity and mortality. This objective was achieved very largely through advances in therapeutics such as the advent of chemotherapy and antibiotics, the work of the national blood transfusion service and improved anaesthesia.

From as early as 1910 overtures had been made to the Royal Infirmary to alleviate pressure on the maternity hospital. Subsequent attempts had also come to nothing until in 1926 a conclusion was reached with the purchase of George Watson's School from the Merchant Company. An obstetrical unit of 150 beds was constructed and at the same time the Florence Nightingale Nurses' Home was built to provide accommodation for the midwives and their pupils. On 1st March 1939 the Old Simpson closed and the Simpson Memorial Maternity Pavilion, which was incorporated into the Royal Infirmary, assumed responsibility for Maternity services. In the new Pavilion the principle of isolation as a means of containing infection was fully implemented and by 1979 the number of beds had increased to 225 while the hazards of childbirth and perinatal mortality had been drastically reduced.

From 1939 to 1948 the Hospital was administered by the Managers of the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh (see LHB1); from 1948 to 1974 it came under The Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh and Associated Hospitals Board of Management (see LHB2); from 1974 to 1984 the hospital was part of South Lothian District (see LHB28). It became part of the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh National Health Service Trust in 1994 (LHB43). As a result of hospital re-organisation in 1999, it was placed in the Lothian University Hospitals NHS Trust (LHB46). Following re-organisation within NHS Lothian, the Hospital closed in 2003 with a new maternity unit known as the Simpson Centre for Reproductive Health opened at the new Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh at Little France.

1 Directors' Minutes, 1956-1939

The Directors' Minutes record the routine administration of the Maternity Hospital. They contain minutes of the general meetings of the Directors, of their committees and of the sub-committees occasionally created to meet particular needs. They also contain annual statements of accounts.

This series of minute books includes records of the Annual Meetings of the Governors, Directors and Friends of the hospital from the thirteenth such meeting in 1865. The minutes of these meetings form the basis of the hospital's annual reports.

2 Medical Board Minutes, 1871-1958

The first few meetings of the Board of Medical Officers, some of which were held jointly with the House Committee, are contained in the Directors' Minute Book. In terms of the revised constitution of 1871 the Medical Board was assigned special powers and a definite sphere of duty, and from 14th July, 1871 its minutes appear in a separate volume. The Board was responsible for the medical aspects of the hospital's administration. Its members dealt with appointments of medical staff, the quarterly appointment of duty officers, the authorising of clinics, the modernisation of wards and the maintenance of satisfactory medical and sanitary standards. From 12th May, 1920 these functions were taken over by the Medical Staff Committee. The idea of appointing a registrar was introduced by the committee in 1922 and was realised the following year, from which date the registrar was required to submit a report at every meeting and to draw up an annual medical report from 1924. The Medical Staff Committee did much to encourage the establishment of post-natal clinics and venereal disease clinics and to promote standards of health and hygiene.

3 Finance Committee Minutes, 1920-1923

The Finance Committee was erected in terms of a resolution of a Directors' Meeting on 2nd March, 1920. The committee was entrusted with the general oversight of the hospital's financial arrangements and its sanction was required by the House Committee for all expenditure on new works or supplies over the sum of £25.

4 House Committee Minutes, 1871-1902

The House Committee was already meeting in regular session by 1856, the date at which the first extant Directors' minute book commences. Minutes of their meetings, which concerned tradesmen's contracts and accounts and the domestic administration of the hospital, are contained in the Directors' minute book until July 1871, the year in which the constitution and laws were revised. On 3rd July the House Committee noted its desire "that its organisation and corporate action should be strengthened and become even more prominent than hitherto in the work of the Hospital" and from the 17th of that month a separate book of House Committee minutes was maintained. The meeting of the House Committee on 19th May, 1879 appears to be the first at which the House Surgeons submitted their monthly report. These reports are not engrossed in the House Committee minutes, but survive as separate volumes. They contain patient statistics and details of maternal, foetal and infant deaths.

5 Ladies' Committee Minutes, 1938-1939

The Ladies Committee was appointed by the Directors, who in April, 1872 approved the idea of resuscitating the Committee. Its function is described in the Constitution of 1905 as advising and assisting the Directors "in matters falling especially under female direction and superintendence". Except for a very brief period they did not keep a separate minute book. A synopsis of their report to the Directors is encapsulated in the Annual Reports from 1874.

6 Practical Midwifery Board Administration Minutes, 1908-1922

This Board was erected as a result of a Dispensary Sub-Committee meeting in June 1908. It met for the first time in the same month with a view to drawing up rules and regulations and to supervise the carrying into effect of a proposed new scheme of practical midwifery teaching.

The board issued Conjoint Certificates to students for attending clinics and cases. It continued to perform this function after deciding in 1922 that, due to new conditions, its financial responsibilities must terminate.

7 Annual Reports, 1870-1938

The first annual report held is that of the 26th Annual General Meeting of the Governors, Directors, Subscribers and Friends of the hospital held on 10th April 1871. (The 1844– 1846 Report of the Edinburgh Maternity Hospital is held in the University Library [SB–61804/1] and the NLS holds the 11th, 14th, 17th, and 19th Reports.) The reports contain the Directors' reports to the Subscribers, patient statistics, annual abstracts of account, lists of subscriptions and donations and of office bearers and patrons. From 1874 the ladies Committee report to the Directors is presented annually and Building Fund accounts are given for periods when building projects were in progress. From 1926 the Constitution and Laws are included and later reports also contain abridgements of the Medical Report and excerpts from Departmental Reports.

These reports consist of a summary of cases encountered during the year, statistical analyses, detailed descriptions of maternal morbidity and antenatal complications and a paediatric section. They also list the hospital's medical staff. Detailed tables of cases were not published in war-time editions because of shortage of paper. An annotation on the cover of the 1955 edition (from accession 9/99) states that the reports were not produced in the years 1949-1954.

19 Domiciliary Midwifery Service Registers, 1958-1983

In terms of the National Health Service Act of 1948 the provision of domiciliary midwifery service became a statutory duty of the local authority. Five domiciliary midwifery centres were established in Edinburgh. By 1952 the Corporation had a full time midwives' staff of twelve and municipal midwives attended about half of the 1,200 domiciliary births annually. After 1952 the decline in domiciliary births and the proportional increase in the rate of hospital confinements as well as a reduction in the birth rate led to the closing of several of the centres and a reduction in the number of midwives thus employed. Three midwives were employed from the Simpson Memorial Maternity Pavilion to attend domiciliary cases.

The registers record the patient's history, housing conditions, midwife's ante-natal supervision, patient's obstetric history and the delivery and puerperium.

39 Queen Mary Nursing Home: Register of Admissions, 1954-1957

After a successful public appeal launched in 1911, the Queen Mary Nursing Home, consisting of three adjoining houses in Chalmers Street, was opened in 1913 with the objective of providing medical and surgical beds for patients of limited means who wished to be treated privately by their own doctors. Subsequently the hospital expanded with the purchase of an adjoining house on the north side, opened in 1921, and one on the south side, opened in 1927. Because of the growing demand for maternity beds, the latter was adapted to provide ten maternity beds in small wards and a labour ward. By 1938 the hospital, which was run by a Board of Management and three Trustees, comprised 56 medical and surgical beds, ten maternity beds and an anaesthetic room. The nursing staff consisted of the Lady Superintendent, four sisters, one housekeeping sister and thirty nurses. In 1955 the hospital became part of the National Health Service and in 1957 it became part of the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh and Associated Hospitals.

Under this arrangement the unit of twelve maternity beds was run as an annexe to the Simpson Memorial Maternity Pavilion and the rest of the nursing home was taken over for use as residential accommodation for nurses. With reduced demand for maternity beds, the nursing home was finally closed down in 1977.

The register of admissions contains details of the patients, indicates whether they were medical, surgical or maternity patients and notes the fees paid.
